NEW INN AT ROSLIN, BY D. WILSON.

D AVID WILSON vintner at Rollin, begs leave to return his most grateful acknowledgments to those Noblemen, Gentlemen, Ladies, and others, who have so often done him the honour of frequenting his house for upwards of twenty years, and respectfully acquaints them. That he has now fitted up, in a neat and gented manner, the house hard by the CASTLE of ROSLIN, of easy decest, and commonding a far more beautiful and extensive prospect than the former INN.—He has also erected Marquees on the eminence above the touse, for those who may chuse that situation; and having other appartments in the neighbourhood, he flatters himself, the accommodate will be found fully as good as formerly, both for Bacus and Enternational and the Strawners, with excellent stabling for horses.

As the Strawberry season is now commenced, with the appearance of a good crop. D. Wilson humbly hopes for the countenance and support of his former Friends and the Public, affairing them that nothing will be wanted on his part to render the entertainments agreeable in every respect.

MUSIC attends every day.

READ a fecond time, the bill to prevent fmuggling, and the Irith poltage bill's also, that to enable Justices of the Peace to repair the county jails.

Agreed to the report of the amendments made to the Soldier Trades Bill, and ordered it to be ingroffed.

Passed the Scotch corn bill.

Between three and four hundred members having taken their between three and four hundred members having taken their feats by three o'clock, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer being flow come, the Houle immediately refolved infeli into a Committee of Ways and Means, and Mr Gilbert having taken the Chair, Mr Pitt rife, and began, by observing that the structure of a person who biled the office with which he was home. tuation of a person with filled the office with which he was ho-moured was it all times implement; but particularly so, when, after the nation had for some time suited the bleshings of peace, the found himself under the necessity of imposing heavy bustens on the poblic. It was, however, fone consolation to him, not only that necessity called for those burdens, but also that he had not occasioned that acceptive. The people knew, that when the accounts of a long, and expensive war were to be closed, the butdens that must be laid upon them could not be light. Yet this one pleasure would arise out of the business of that day, that whatever additional weight should be faid upon the nation, it would be nearly the whole that would be the tonfequence of the late war. The task his office threw upon the nation, it would be nearly the whole that would be the confequence of the late war. The task his office threw upon him was unpopular; but he trusted to the candour and generolity of the House, and of the nation at large, that what the exilection would have a state of the world. He then went into an exount of the flare of our finances, accurately reporting the arrivous litatements in figures. He began with the lupply which hadralready been voted for the fervice of the preferr, year. For the navy (he faid) there had been voted 3, 253,859 I for the ordnance, 610,149 I for the army, 4,045,494 I. To these votes must be added provisions for the disciencies in the taxes, amounting to 1,576,647 I, and to make good to other services 026,656 I. Provision must also be d ficiencies in the taxes, amounting to 1,576,647 L and to make good to other fervices 936,656 L Provision must also be made for 2,500,000 L Exchequer bits isleed for the fervice of last year; 120,000 L to the civil list, for furns issued by his Majetty, in consequence of addresses presented from that House; and also 25,000 L island for the purpose of carrying on the buildings at Somerier House; making in the whole, including several other sums not specified in this account, upwards of 12,000,000 L. The Public (he faid), ought this year to repay to the Bank of England 2,000,000 L advanced three years ago by the Governor and Somerous in the reserval year to repay to the Bank of England 2,000,000 l. advanced three years ago by the Coveroor and Company for the renewal of their charter; but he believed new would be lausified for the prefers with Exchequer bills. The next points to be confidered were the Ways and Means for railing the fupply already voted, and for providing for fach other furns as were payable this year. Towards Ways and Means the House had already granted the tax on land and malt, which he rated at 2.750.000 l. to thefe he would propose to and 2,000.000 l. Exchequer Bills, belides the z,500,000 L. ufually iffued every year, making in the whole 4,500,000 L. The Sinking Fund he took at only 1000,000 L. Thete different fums, with others which we have omitted, reduced the Ways and Means just to the 6,000,000 l. voted for the supply, which sum he proposed to raise by a loan. In negociating this loan, he said, he had raised what he strongly recommended last year -a competitions. Two sets of gentlemen had treated with him; and, in order to induce them to propole realonable terms, he had affirmed them they should have the entire dipotal of the whole loan; except put to much of it as had always been referved for the public companies and offices; and he affured the Houle, upon his honour, that in this he would keep his word. The prices of the flock had been foon fettled by both parties; the difference only regarded the annuity which was to be given to the funderibers; one fet of gentlemen infifted upon 6 s. a year, the other offered to take 5 s, 6 d. He closed of course with the latter. Thus the terms of the loan were these—for every 100 l. subscribed, the Public were to give 100 l. lubicribed, the Paone were to g 50 l. Four per cents, valued at. 379 8

Total, L. 99 19 25 Into the firm to be paid, by the Public would be lomewhat thost of that lent; that this was to be made up to the aloney then der by a discour of lorery tiefers, which would call the Public nothing. To a fatheriber of 1000 f. Would be givenful loury, ackets. In former lotteries, the profit on tickets was generally estimated at 3. (the prime cold being so be) but as in the very slottery there would be only 36,000 trekets, he would rate the profit at 44. per ticket, or 21. 8 a per cent which, with the 99 1.10 st 10 ft above meoritoned would make 104 1. 7 s. 21 d fo that the fiblication would have, apont the whole a descent of 21. 7 s. 21 d. There was another the whole, a doucdur of z l, 7 s, 2 d.d. There was another thing, which would make the bargain more profitable to the subscribers; but the House might or might not, as it pleased, grant or withhold that house: He meant the discount upon prompt payment, which would be a doucear of 1 l, 7 s, 2 d. er cent, and would increase the bonus on every 100 la fubleri-

The next thing to be confidered was the unfunded debt. He would have been glid to fund the whole this fellion, that the people might know at note the extent of their burthens; but was a prehensive that carrying to much thock to market would greatly lover the fundating prices of the funds; and he found also, that if he had adhered to his original intention, and similarly like debt, he could not have made to good a bargain for the public as he had done; for as the g and 4 per cents, would have been lowered, he must have increased the normal debt, by taking these two funds at a lower estimate than he had tared them. For this reason, therefore, he had given up me former the ention, and resolved to fund only between in and feven millions of the unfunded debt: The amount of this debt ous about suelve or thinteen millions in pary bills and on mellion in ordinance debendures. Though he eintended a fund only feven multions of this debt, yet fell, as most of the pay-the actualty bear interest, and as the interests on that past which he did not mean to fund this year, would amon 280,000 l. he proposed to lay on takes this year for the interest of the whole, sloves only one half of it would be finded. The point then to be confidered was, in what find he should give stock: He had always been of opinion that the stock which would bring the price scarcit to par was the most eligible to the public as Parliament ought always to dave in eye to the redemption of the debt. Mr Pitt then went into a long to pancial differention on the difference between a three or toot pet cent, and a five per cent, fund : This last, he confessed was a favourite food with him: It was a new one, indeed, and, properly feeking, experimental, but it was fuch a fund as appeared to him extremely defireable on many accounts. He appeared to him extremely defireable on many accounts and the first hi and, properly spaking experimental, but it was such a fund as appeared to him extremely desireable on many accounts. He knew, that in order to induce people to place their money in a five per cent, stack, it would be meetflary to make it irredeemable for a certain number of years. Some people thought thirty years a proper term; for his part, he would rather adopt a different plan, and make it irredeemable only till a given sum (35 millions for instance) of my of the other stocks should have been paid off. Thus those who should have been paid off. Thus those who should have been paid off. Thus those who should have been and stock the paid off. would be of opinion that her per cents, would be irredeemable for post and should the 25 millions be paid off, in some or twenty years, or a full more distant period, the bolders of this shock would have no realist to complain that the public faith was stocked. years, or a full more diffant period, the holders of this Hock would have no realish to complain that the public faith was tro-ken with them? Thus the price of the flock (he faid) would be raifed by the idea that it would be fpeedly redeemed; and the nation would not find ittelf precluded from paying off this fund when its refources would enable it to do fo. The price of this five per cent, fund he would estimate at 93 k and the biolders of Navy Bills would have flock in this fund for their Bills; thus the holder of a 93 k bill would be entitled to 100k flock; but as he did not mean to fund the whole of their Bills; thus the holder of a 93. bill would be entitled to 1001, took; but as he did not near to fund the whole of the Navy-Debt this year, so of course it would be necessary to regulate which holders of Bills should have the preference in subscribing to this fund. Here he divided the Navy Bills into different chasts, giving a preference to those of the lorgest standing and making some allowance for the discount that had have the manda into them. By this arrangement the holders of Navy Bills arrangement the holders of Navy Bills arrangement the holders of manda into the place of the discount that had been some allowance for the discount that had not some them the discount that had been so the place of the discount the holders of manda into some in this mannet he disposed of seven millions on of debt, studing it in this new stock.

The next thing Mr Pitt confidered was the means of paying the interest on this new Stock, the Six Millions Loan, and that part of the unfunded debt which bears an interest of four per cent. This brought the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the taxes.

Con this head, the first stricle proposed, he faid, was so generally used, that it appeared to him a very proper object of tax-ation, as a tax on such an article must be very productive.— This article was Ham, the total number of which annually. made in this kingdom he elimated at four millions; of which about 750,000 were experted; fo that there were three millions; which mights fairly be taked: For this putpole he divided them into two classes, one confisting of hats made fally of fest; the other states to the proposed to lay a tax of Sixpense 4 on the latter Two Shilling; and the produce of the whole he estimated at 150,000. per annum.

Ribbons and Gauzes were the next articles proposed; as the former tax would fall exclusively on the men, this he observed would be almost exclusively on the other fex, except indeed at would be almost exclusively on the other sex, except indeed at a general election. About 25000 looms were annually employed in weaving these articles; but as many of them were occasionly out of use, he would recken them only at 19000; by which 71,135,000 yards were made every year: He proposed to lay only a tax of One Penny per yard; which he calculated would produce 120,0001, he said, were already taxed pretty highly, but at the same time in a very disproportionate degree; for while the coals, confuned in London paid a duty of eight militings per challens, those used in the interiour parts of the kingdom were subjection a tax of only live fullings. The reason of this difference was, that when it was proposed in Queen Anne's reign to build to new churches in London, a duty of three shillings was imposed on every chaldron of coals conthree shillings was imposed on every chaldron of coals con-funed in the capital towards rating a fund to carry on those buildings, and as shooth webes were to be built in London on-ly, it was reasonable that London should bear the whole ex-When the churches were finished, the Legislature did pence. When the churches were finished, the Legislature did not think proper to take off the tax, but applied the produce of it to the exigencies of the State; but though it was fit that London should detray the whole expence attending works from which the capital above was to derive advantage, yet it was not reasonable, that after shole works were finished, the inhabitants of the capital thould puy three-eighths more in that article towards the public appender than the reft of the kingdom s the intended, therefore, that coals carried into the other ports of the kingdom should pay as much as those brought into the port of London. This, he find, would be stree fallings additional per chaldron, which would fall on the inland confumers : and from this tax he expected 150,000l. The duty, he faid, would produce a great deal more, but he intended to exempt from the payment of it all coals confumed in great manufactures. Horfer, he observed, had often been mentioned as proper fubjects for taxation; and he had resolved to propose to the Committee, that a tax of sen faillings per horse be laid, with an exception to favour of those employed in the carrying on trade and agriculture. The number of horses that would be liable to this tax was very great; from the number of four wheel carriages and flage-coaches that pay to the wheel-tax, he calculated, allowing three borfes to each, that there must be 50,000 horfes for their conveyances, exclusive of the infinite number of saddle and race borfes. This tax he rated at

Printed and flained fiven and callicoes were the next articles proposed, and he believed very were able to bear an additional duty, as they now fold 20 l. per cent. cheaper than during the war: He would not enumerate the different classes into which he meant to divide thefe articles; but faid that he intended to impose duties on them from three pence up to twelve pence per yard, according to their different breadths; which duties would be equal to about 10 l. per cent. and would produce to the mublic 120,000 L produce to the jublic 120,000 h.

The was forry that the very great extrencies of the flate obliged thin to fingle out to necessary an article as candles; but the duty he should lay on their would be so low, that he hoped it would not be sound burthensome: He means to impose only lan additional halfstrong per poind. In poor samines he believed, not more than to provide of caldles were confumed in the work to the trapposade of caldles were confumed only by the per ann. Yello small a duty on an article in such general use would produce 100,000.

Next, he propose that all persons dealing to exciseable commodities thould be obliged to take out a licence; the high-eff class except one, to pay 10.1 for such licence, the lowest 1

The first process of the second o was difficult. He faid, to lay down any data, on whethe could calculate how many person would be made hable to pay for licence for shooting; he did not mean, however, that a licence should be construined into a qualification for killing game to mote who other wife are not qualified; he meant only that shofe whe are otherwise qualified, should be disabled from shooting if they are otherwise qualified. He reckning three manifests did not take out a licence; He reckoned three qualified per-fone in each parith in Eugland who would pay to this tax; and fone in each parish in Logiand who would pay to this tax; and one guines on each would produce 30,000 l.

Next he proposed to Jay an additional duty on paper equations third of what it pays at present, which would produc

The sum necessary for paying the interest on the loan, the part of the unsunded debt which he proposed is sund, and the four per cent on that which he would leave unfunded till the next yeary would amount to little more than 900,000 fo that the new taxes should produce the sums he expected from them, there would be a surplus of lonewhat more than 30,000 in layour of the public. Taxing that in about two hours, opened and empired the whole of the Budger, Mr Pin concluded with moving his first resolution relative to the loan, and after that a number of others respecting the taxes: Mr Gilbert slaving read the surplimenting the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the bloom, single resolution, the surplimenting the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the bloom, firm, and open manner in which he had chequer on the hiberal, firm, and open manner in which he had laid before the House the extent of those weighty demands for which the faith of the public was pledged, he then commended his adherence to that mode of rating money to which the example of former Administrations had given a fanction. The reputation of our national credit, he faid, rendered former additional burthers on the public inevitable, and he only lamented that the greater part of the weight of the taxes proposed by on the manufacturing branches. Mr Fox then observed, that though he might differ from some Gentlemen, who required as acquisicence in a point where no presented amendment could be offered, yet he would not be precluded from referring to himself the privilege of giving his sentiments where suture occasions might addition cations might produce motives for a difference in opinion. Unprepared as he was to judge of matters which the Right Hon. Centleman's fituation afforded him an opportunity of intestigating, he begged leave to say, that what had been just now aldered relative to the holders of navy bills, did not convey to his mind that satisfaction which would enable him to form an opinion thereon; he appealed, therefore, to the Right Hon. Centleman for more explicit information on, the subject. He Gentleman for more explicit information on the fubjeft. He then adverted to the inefficacy of the tax proposed to be said then adverted to the inchicacy of the tax proposed to be and non-ribbons and gauzes, which he thought shuft all far their of the expected returns; as according to the flate of population in this country, he made it appear by calculations discipling female, from the moment of birth, must be rated to consume twenty yards of ribbon annually, to accomplish the revenue expected to the produced by it. With respect to the advantages which the munitary calculation laid before the Fluides, but the advantages which the munitary calculation laid before the Fluides, but the advantages of interest relative to the forces of the fluides, but the second that advance of interest relative to the five per cents, he argues and the state of the three per cents, had an equal prospect of being an equivalent to stockholders, and would shereby, in some mafure, obviate the end proposed. This point, however, to would contest on the grounds of calculation. He hoped he difference with the Right Hon. Gentleman in the mode of proposing to liquidate the national debt would not be mittered and poling to liquidate the national debt would not be mifragrafianted but he had his doubts that the fluctuation of human affairs would not fecure to us those certain prospects we all wished, and which he allowed were attainable, but not with tertains The Chancellor of the Exchequer affured the Hon. gentler man, that he was always happy to give that information which any want of explicitness on his fide might render occosary, and that the gentleman's candour and generousy had a claim to his attention; he then informed Mr Fox, that the concurrence of the holders of navy bills to the terms proposed was optional and they only remained in the fame fituation as before, made it their choice to fland over and be paid in the order ostablished formerly, but that they must wait till these matters should come before the public for liquidation, for which these was no flated time, and the public were under no compulary restraint to find any, so that they must remain creditors to that faith, which the honour of the nation had hitherto preferred inviolable.

Mr Fox then requested to know if those who declined the offer of the lubleription forfeited the order of time, to refer to actual payment. Having been farished on this head, the Lord Survey role, and complained of the hardings the would entire to the manufacturing bodies through the kingdom in confedience of the proposed tax upon roals. He requested the minuster, therefore, to inform the House is any exemption way to be made in favour of the great and important works which require large quantities of fuel. The Chancellor of the Exchequer nodding affent, his Lordship then submitted to the House the control of the control House the comparative fituation of our printed and flamped libens and callicoes, when they fhould be burthened with this tax, to those of our neighbours, who would be exempt from fimilar duties. Sir John Wrottefley affured the House, that the tax upon coals would produce a melancholy effect on the trading part of Wolserhampton, &c. where this arricle was indispensable to aheir manufactures. He mentioned many circumstances that rendered a closer attention to the operation of this tax nectsfa-ry, both as to trule, and the relative fittation of the industri-

Mr Pitt fatisfied this gentleman, by informing him, that all fire engines were excepted by the bill intended to be brought in which, of courfe, totally excluded the tin mines from the taxe. He then mentioned his approbation of fome information which the last gentleman but one who had spoken had given on the subject, affuring the committee, that he should embrace devery occasion that could throw any light them the very occasion that could throw any light upon the subject, and had taken every step which the best informed men could point out to him on the occasion ; but as he had not the happiness of a communication of the Hon Baronet's fentiments on the subject before, he new received them with pleasure.

Mr Dempfar observed, that any conversation at prefent on the merits of the bills to be proposed was premature, the proper time for that purpose being when, with their clauses and arrangements, they should be before them in the House. Mr Demptter then animadverted on the inequality of the licenfing times then animadverted on the inequality of the licenting taxes proposed, pledging his honour, that he knew many brewers who scarce realized four times the four required as a license; however, he should wave all susther discussion on a subject which he submitted to the feelings of the Hon. mover. Sir G. Page Turner pointed out the luxuries of life as the most proper objects of taxation, lamenting that trade was always the object of public burthers, and that places of public refort and amufement were almost exempt . He insisted, that footh places ought to become objects of reference to the national footness, and hoped they would be taken into confideration. Sir James Johnson highly approved of the tax on qualifications for shooting, but asked whether it would not be more betoning in gentlemen to pay two guness where camelescent were obliged to pay one.

The Lord Avocate of Scotland represented many difficulties the coal bill would bring on Scotland, and countersted many hardfhips the poor there mult undergo, it the northern parts of the country, whole inhabitants had many niles to draw home, their fuel, were not relieved from the burthelis which the fituation and conveniencies of England tentiered more tolerable.

Si Thomas said, he could not take up the time of the House by entering at that moment into any distribution of a circumstance so lamentable. He doubted not but it was sufficient for him to have staged, that the melacked of the existed, to obtain the immediate attention of the House to in He would therefore content himself with motres of the unabitants of Shetland, to enquire into the di ferings of the inhabitants of Sherfand, an island containing twenty thousand inhabitants; and these, from their habits of industry, and that industry exercised in the fisheries, among the most valuable of British subjects. But, from the northerly stuation of that island, they had not felt the effects of last fummer; their fisheries had failed; their crops had failed; their cattle had perished. The gentlemen and clergy of the country had exhaulted their relources in endeavouring to relieve them. In such an extremity, they had transmitted a petition for succour to his Majesty. They ought, indeed, to have applied directly to the House of Commons. But, from the extreme diffance, and the uncertainty of navigation, the letters chine these saids had arrived a whole month after date; so that, it matters were had at that date, it was probable they were worse now. Time pressed; and there was no such informality in their mode of applying for relief, at ought to retard the bounty of Parliament. He mentioned a case in point: About the beginning of the last session but one of last Parliament, when a famine raged in the northern parts of the kingdom, the House of Commons, on the motion of certain members, had extended immediate and ample relief to the fufferers, by bountiful fupplies of corn.

" Mr Wellbore Ellir hewed, that the formalities of Parliament might be reconciled with the inclination to grant relief to the poor Shetlanders, by a mellage for that purpose from the Throne. Mr Pitt sepresented, that it was impossible to impose that such a message would not be specifily tent to them. But hippoling that this tax would not deter farmers from growing hops. It is that this tax would not deter farmers from growing hops. It is not the profess of farmers; and that was a circumstance that ought not be overlooked.

St. John Mostepher aversed, that the longer he viewed the tax no gala, it appeared no bination of the Minister had been for fair, and so ingestions, that it he had groonled, to any a tax on the Bible, he would have gone a little farther with him; but he hoped the Houfe would have gone a little farther with him; but he hoped the Houfe would have gone a little farther with him; but he
